

Notaricon: Meanings of the Alefbet

The letters of the alefbet are the nexus between the Tree of Life and the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil. To the degree we perceive language to be primarily denotative and rooted in the tangible things of this world, we partake of the lesser tree. To the degree we perceive the connotative and transforming dimensions of language by its use of allusion to the principles underlying creation, we are partaking of the higher tree that leads to life eternal.

Notaricon is the art of reading a Hebrew word forms not as sound cues pointing to specific meanings, but as graphic statements of interacting principles. Letters are read as words and phrases. To the degree traditional sound meanings are supported by notaricon, those meanings are valid. To the degree sound meanings are unsupported by notaricon, those meanings must be acknowledge to be inventions of man. For comparison of what is offered here with traditional views of the Hebrew alefbet, I recommend Rabbi Ginsburgh's presentation at The Inner-Dimension website. Significations of the Paleo-Hebrew script are also found at the screens beginning at <http://www.bethashem.org/ketav.html>, a site with many additional language resources.

Like Torah, the letters are written within and without-- that is, they have their interior and exterior significances, as well as their positive and negative aspects. The lines of the letters and the blank spaces within and around the letters all have lessons for us.

The basic meanings listed below are used in the Paleo-Hebrew Hypertext dictionary. The list is by no means definitive; for meanings of letters involve much more than their shapes, as each letter enjoys various positionings within the Crown Diamond and Adam Kadmon, with correspondences to both the human body and to the greater cosmos. Before we can progress to the higher notaricon implied by the positionings on the Tree of Life, however, we must first restore foundational understandings of language.
